

The Orange County Human Rights Commission Presents:

Addressing Anti-Semitism:

Lessons from the Past, Practices for Today

The stark rise in antisemitism and hate crimes in the United States over the past few years has spilled over to increased incidents affecting our daily lives. Reacting to this unwelcome change, many of us are seeking context, understanding, and resources to combat antisemitism in our communities.

Join us for a discussion with Abigail E. Miller, Director of Education at the Holocaust Museum and Center for Tolerance and Education in an intense workshop that will provide necessary historical background to help understand traditional and contemporary antisemitism – and to work proactively and reactively to mitigate it. Attendees will learn strategies and analyze language to identify and combat antisemitism wherever it occurs. Bringing depth and practicality to a complex issue, this workshop will equip participants with practical tools for addressing antisemitism through intervention and education.

About the Holocaust Museum and Center for Tolerance and Education:

The mission of the Holocaust Museum & Center for Tolerance and Education is to educate the community about the lessons and legacies of the Holocaust, genocide, and human rights. Through teaching about the Holocaust and other genocides of the 20th century, we can make relevant connections between our global violent histories and the world today. It is the Center's goal that all visitors will understand and appreciate the importance of tolerance, human rights, social justice, and moral courage.
